EDWARD C. CARTER

The Editors deeply regret to announce the death on November 9 in New York of Edward C. Carter, the former Secretary General of the Institute of Pacific Relations and one of its outstanding leaders for over twenty years. Mr. Carter, who was seventy-six years old, had been active in the Institute from its earliest days, having served as Secretary of the American IPR from 1926 to 1933, as Secretary General of the international IPR from 1933 to 1946, and again as Executive Vice-Chairman of the American IPR for several years after 1946. By his remarkable energy and enthusiasm, as well as his great organizational skill, he played a distinguished role in developing both the program and the international prestige of the Institute in many parts of the world. From his early days as a YMCA secretary in India he retained a profound belief in the advancement of mutual understanding between Asian and Western peoples and did much, especially in the United States, to develop the systematic study and discussion of Asian problems. He played a major role in initiating the special IPR research program known as "The Inquiry Series" between 1939 and 1945 and in bringing about the Delhi Conference on Indian-American relations in 1949. Many of the distinctive achievements of the Institute may be attributed to his vision and persistence.
